

Centre collaborateur de l'OMS
pour la recherche historique en santé publiqueHistoire et santé globale/History and Global Health

7-9 mai/7-9 May 2015

Few will deny that present-day history of health is going more and more global. Emerging infectious diseases but also non-transmissible diseases tend to mobilize health policy and health care workers at the global as well as the national and regional levels. This workshop will motivate scholars in history of health to advance new, more conceptual, insights and provide a forum for scholars to present research with the objective to push the frontiers of knowledge via comparative and international frameworks.

Friday, May 8th : 9:15/13:00 (chair : Antoine Flahault, Geneva)9:15/9:30 : Welcome : Antoine Flahault*9:30/10:30 : Jon Arrizabalaga (Barcelona) : On the reach and limits of global health policies in the early 21st century: the Ebola epidemic crisis in West Africa10:30/11:30 : Tomoko Akami (Canberra) : Japan's Foucault: the emergence of a modern welfare state and the meaning of the medizinische Polizei in Meiji Japan and its colonial Taiwan, 1873-190511:30/12:00 : Coffee12:00/1:00 : James L.A. Webb, Jr (Colby college) : Intestinal worms and human global health in historical perspectiveFriday, May 8th : 2:30/6:00 (chair : Bernardino Fantini, Geneva)2:30/3:30 : María Eugenia Galiana-Sánchez (Alicante): The role of agencies and international organizations in the development of public health nursing (1939- 1974)3:30/4:30 : James A. Gillespie (Sydney): International Constructions of Social Security and Public Health: Policy intersections 1920-19704:30/5:00 : Tea5:00/6:00 : Susan Gross Solomon (Toronto) & Lion Murard (Paris): Reflections on "outliers" in global health then and nowSaturday, May 9th : 9.30/12.00 (chair : Patrick Zylberman, Paris)9:30/10:30 : Iris Borowy / Walter Bruchhausen (Aachen) : Capitalist development aid or communist solidarity - does it matter? Comparing health related activities in low-income countries by East and West Germany10:30/11:00 : Coffee11:00/12:00 : Vincent Barras (Lausanne) : Questioning the global health perspective and general discussion

Students and people from outside the Institute for Global Health wishing to attend and participate are warmly welcomed